A Practical Case Study in 90 Minutes!

According to 2016 guidance issued by HUD's Office of General Counsel, if a policy or practice restricting access to housing on the basis of criminal history disparately impacts individuals in a protected class, then that policy or practice may violate the Fair Housing Act.

This interactive online session, led by NAHRO's in-house policy experts, will provide a brief review of HUD's guidance and its current status. The session will also offer a practical case study exploring how the Adams County Housing Authority has embraced this guidance by aligning its criminal history screening standards with its mission to empower people and strengthen communities.
